In one hand she held an umbrella, a boy of candy and a paper pall of cysters. With the other she clutched her skirts. There was an expression of unmixed apprehension on her face, says the Detroit Tribune.

"Can't I assist you, madam?" gently inquired the small man in a rubber coat, who had madly rushed to the rescue.

A gust of wind struck the umbrella amidships. It careened fercibly against the woman's hat and the latter was knocked forward upon her nose. Simultaneously the candy-box displayed a marked disposition to slip away from all restraint.

"Wont you let me hold your umbrella ?" persisted the little man very solicitously. She was almost half way to the curb now and the syster-pail seemed inclined to be re-bellious and follow the example of the candy-"But you're losing your packages, madam."

The little man made a grand attempt to save the day and was as grandly repulsed. "You are mistaken, sir. I am not losing my packages." The wind blew and the rain fell. The stout lady tossed her head and jerked the dislo-cated hat into place. With a deft movement she deposited the candy-box under her arm and the ball of the oyster-pail between her teeth. At the same instant she seized the purse firmly with her third and fourth fingers, devoting all the remaining faculties exclusively to the umbrella

"No, sir; I am not losing my packages." The little man bowed and murmured helpessly. "I might remind you, sir," she said as she reached the curb and entered upon a general cadjustment, "that the movement for the emancipation of women has been in progress for several centuries, and I am not one, I assure you, to abrogate thus lightly the insependence gained at the expense of years of labor the most arduous. I contess I was tempted to yield, but, thank Heaven, I did

Half an hour later the little man was still there, staring at a rift in the clouds, as if wondering if it were going to rain all night.

Too Expressive Words. One is sometimes startled at the discovery of a new and most disagreeable force in a single word, when that word is applied to himself to characterize some unpleasant fact of which he has long been aware, says the St.
